No matter when you're arrested, it can be a very traumatic experience. But when you're arrested during the holidays, this can be an even more problematic and stressful time. But in order to not deal with any unwanted surprises during these worrisome moments, there are some things to consider. Keep reading to learn more about what you should know if you've been arrested on holiday.

There Will Be Delays

If you've been arrested during the holidays, then it's important to understand that there will be delays with the whole process. However, it's important to note that the one who is arrested is entitled to have a hearing within a certain amount of days if bail is not set or if they can't afford the price of bail. However, these days are known as "judicial hours," which doesn't include weekends or holidays. That being said, given those holidays that don't work towards those hours, that could mean annoying delays before you see a judge. Therefore, patience is key if you've been arrested during the holiday season.

Know That Arrests Are High

During the holiday season, crime spikes. From stolen merchandise to car theft, arrests are more prevalent during the holiday season. That being said, you should be fully aware of this as it relates to your processing. As more arrests are happening but holiday staff members are few and far between during this time, this could lead to even longer processing times.

Find a Trusted Bail Bonds Company

Being arrested during the holidays can transform a happy holiday season into a tragic one. But to move through the process quickly and make the most out of your situation, it's vital to find a bail bonds company or bail bondsman you can trust. These professionals can lend you the money you need in order to stay out of jail and spend more time with your loved ones. However, finding a dependable bail bonds company isn't easy.

During the holiday season, you should ensure that the bail bonding company you choose:

- Has holiday hours that work for you
- Can lend you the money you need
- Has excellent reviews

By focusing on these qualities, you can help limit stress when you need to the most. Being involved in an arrest is hard enough, but being locked up in a cell can make the situation even worse. Not only are you dealing with the stress of the arrest, but being trapped in jail gives you less time with the people you care about.
