Most Common Reasons
People Are Arrested
During Summer

We know that summer is one of the most magical times of the year. The crops are in full bloom, school is out, and the time to take a long vacation is way past due. Unfortunately, the summer brings forth many activities that can escalate into a legal situation.

When someone is accused of committing a crime, we know it's easy to become overwhelmed and tired with the fight. We've put together a brief explanation of why so many more people seem to get arrested during the summer months.

Arrested During a Concert

The high summer temperatures make people impulsive and irrational with their decisions. Furthermore, summer-time events bring diverse groups of people together. In some situations people can become out of control and enraged leading to a fight. This type of behavior is prominent during large scale events such as concerts where alcohol consumption occurs.

Drinking and Driving

Having a cold one, or several, on the front porch quickly cools off the summer heat. Few things compare to the ice cold beverage, but some people choose to take the risk of going for more or a bite to eat after they succumb to the alcohol. The police departments know that alcohol consumption increases during the summer months; therefore, they increase the number of active patrols to catch people with a DWI or DUI.

Speaking of driving related incidents, people driving unsafely or while drowsy may find themselves at the other end of a patrol car. We know that many people choose to take lavish road trips with friends or family. The amount of DWD, or driving while drowsy, cases rises every summer. If you feel you're becoming too tired to drive, you should stop at a rest stop for a few hours or check into a hotel for the evening. You won't make it to your destination if you have a wreck or are incarcerated.

Robbery When People Are on Vacation

Being away from home for an extended vacation or period of time brings up another common reason people get arrested: home theft. People make choices about how to spend the summer. Excessive spending and partying can easily become a desperate search for money or valuables in another's home. Summer should be a time of relaxation and enjoyment. We realize that some people experience events beyond their control that results in being arrested. Some people find themselves in situations of their own creation. Others may be impaired due to the presence of alcohol or even drugs.
